

I do not wish to have telemarketers contact me at home when i am trying to bond with my children in the precious few hours i have between dinner and bedtime. Please uphold the nj do not call registry. I am a firm believer that we have enough distractions from after school activities and music lessons and sports and need time alone to just listen - really listen to each other about the day's events, school projects, planning for the weekend's schedule and just general discussions about the future, etc., without being interrupted about switching our internet provider.

Please respect our family time - without this private little time together - the kids already do not see their daddy except on the weekends - he the sole bread winner commutes 1 1/2 daily and does not get home until after 8pm when he does not volunteer for the children's county sports meetings.

Thank you for your respecting our precious privacy. Lee Rinderman
